

Scotland Street School was Mackintosh's last major commission in Glasgow and shows evidence of the genius of the mature architect. Impressive leaded glass towers, a magnificent tiled entrance hall and unique stonework all combine to showcase the architect's mastery of the interplay of light and space. Now, the museum can be used by private and corporate clients as a fascinating venue in which to meet for dining, daytime or evening meetings, receptions and product launches.

Glasgow Life and its Service Brands including Glasgow Libraries (found at www.glasgowlife.org.uk) are operating names of Culture and Sport Glasgow.

The Drill Hall on the ground floor is most suitable for dinner parties, prestigious and fun gatherings. Medium sized receptions may also make use of this hall and the surrounding stairwells, corridors and the balcony which overlooks this area. The stairwell itself is an impressive illustration of Mackintosh's appreciation and understanding of natural light and line – and also an ideal position for drinks service and entertainment.

The Kingston Conference Room on the first floor is a bright and well equipped location for meetings, presentations and smaller dinner gatherings.

The small, cinema-style Audio Visual Room would be most suitable for smaller presentations and talks for up to 40 people.

Catering

Event catering at Scotland Street School is provided by the Willow Café operated by Anne Mulhern, owner of the Willow Tea Rooms, also designed by Charles Rennie Mackintosh. The Willow Café caters for a wide range of events including meetings, conferences and dinners held within the museum.
