

Domestic Bliss

A “foodie” self-led trail

This exhibition is all about the “domestic”.
Do you know what that word means? Ask a grown up if you don’t!

Now can you find all the objects and artworks in this room that remind you of a home? Make a quick drawing of some of them below:

Ice Cream Paperweight

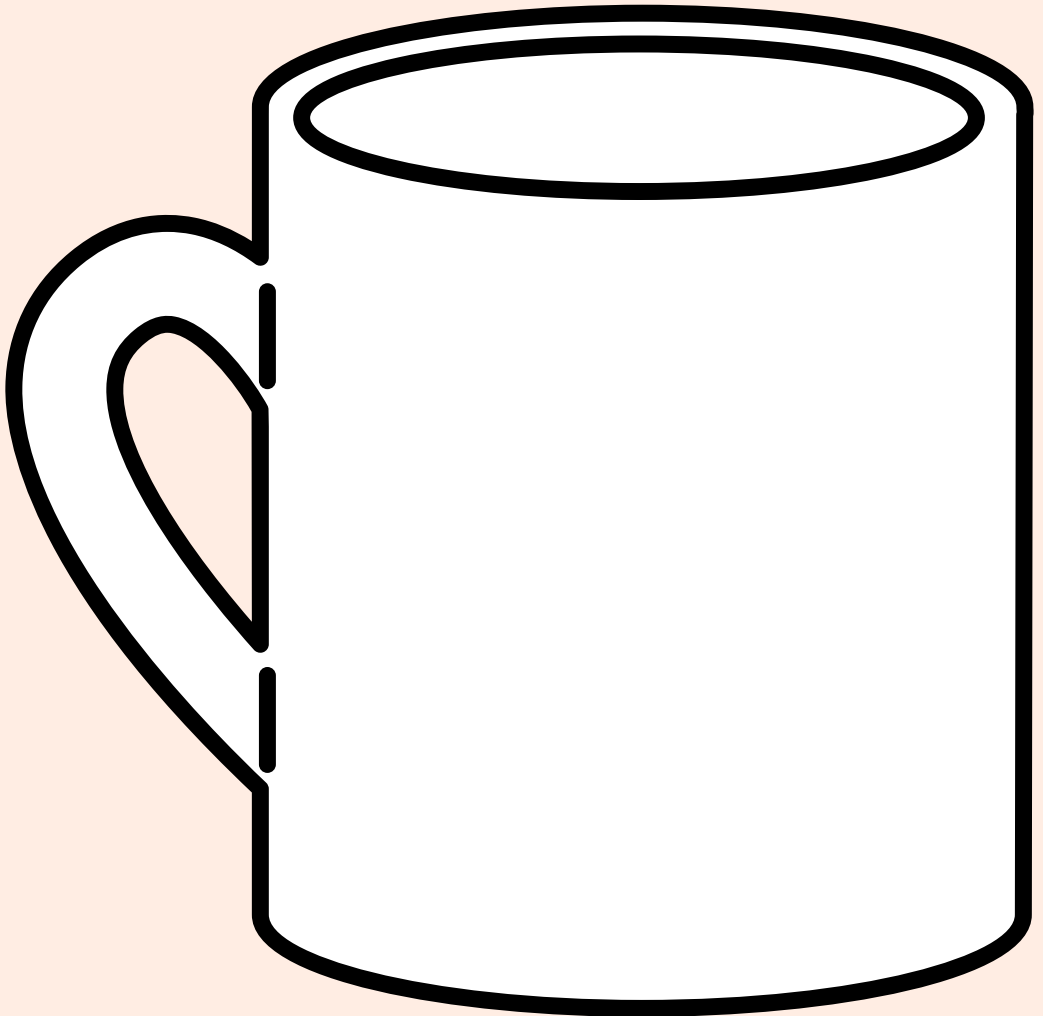

The artist Scott Myles made small sculptures looking like ice cream scoops, in different flavours. We have one on display towards the entrance of this gallery. Can you find it? What flavour do you think it is?

Now have a go at drawing your own ice cream flavour below.
What will it be? Will it be delicious or disgusting?

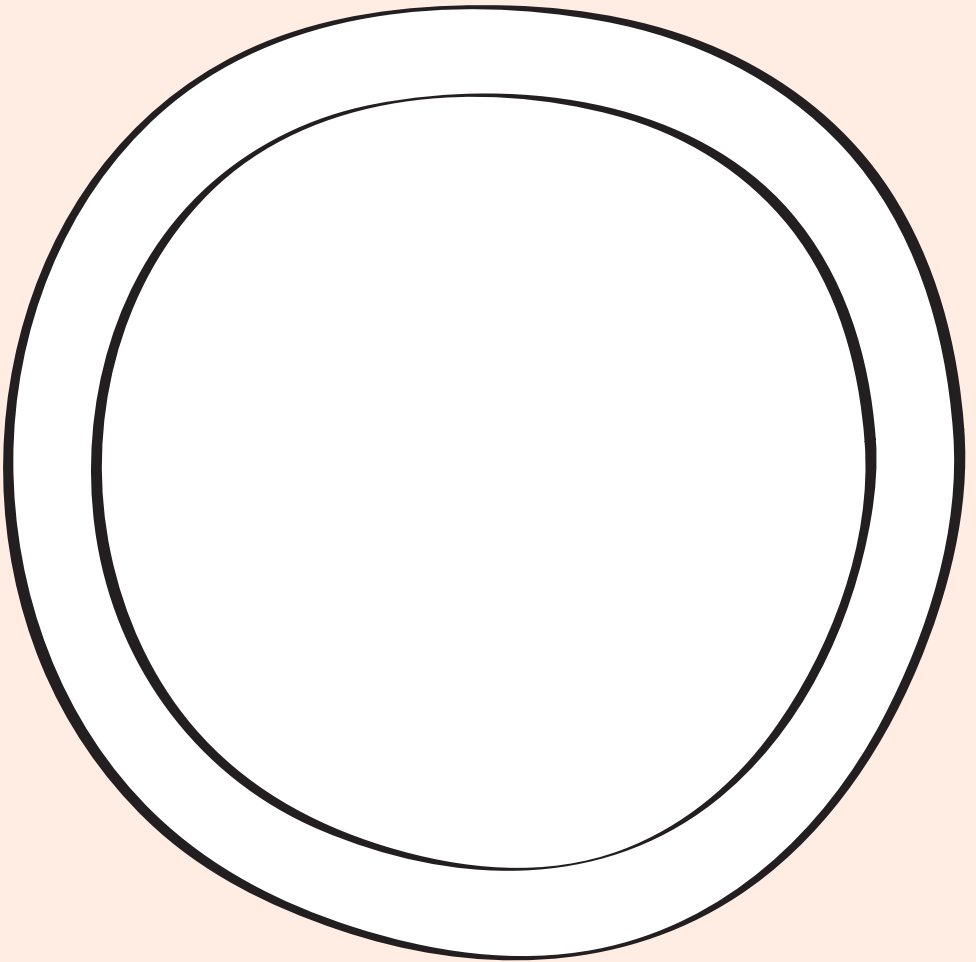

Where are ye fae?

All that ice cream made us thirsty! Can you find a display full of mugs? This is an artwork called Fegs Urny Mugs (2018), by Mandy McIntosh and a group called the Feegie Needlers. Together, they decorated these mugs with typically local images and opinions about Ferguslie, the area in Glasgow where the group was from. Can you design your own mug inspired by where you live? What would you draw on it?

“Food Symbolises home for me”

It's time for a proper meal. Find some plates and cups, with “Home and Hospitality – a City Crockery Set” (2019) by Najma Hussein Abukar and Ruth Impey. It's an artwork made by lots of people in Glasgow from different cultures and communities. It explores how food and eating brings us together and reminds us of our homes. In the plate below, draw a meal that reminds you of your home:

Thanks for following this trail with us! Might it be time for a snack?
